A burning building near Prairie view of a fire; also caused our mind to wander toward this village and our helpless condition should a fire break out here.

We want 500 additional subscribers for this paper during the next six months. Will you help us get them? If so we will allow you 15 percent on all cash subscriptions you will send us. Send for sample copies and show them to your friends.

Look out for a mum social in the near future. The ladies talk of getting one up, but bless us does any one suppose for a moment that the fair creatures could keep mum? Away with the thought; let us by all means have a social, where everybody talks and none keep mum.

Having assumed the responsible position of Postmaster of Union Grove Bro. Colby of the Enterprise has lopped off the dignity of a country Squire. We would be willing to do the same thing if we could get a P. O. but no such plums are lying around within reach in this locality.

The Union Grove Enterprise has closed its twelfth year, and J. C.
Colby, son of the editor has been taken into partnership; the firm now being A. P. Colby & Son. We remember J. C. when a little fellow, hardly able to reach the top of the rack, he used to stick type in the office, but presume he is now fully grown up, so rapidly do the wheels of time change youth to maturity, maturity to old age and decline.
We wish the firm unbounded success, and extend our most cordial greeting.

We will give four months subscription to the NEWS and Detroit Free Press for the best original essay on the "Evils of Intemperance," written by any school boy or girl under the age of 16. The essay to contain not more than 200 words.
For the second best, four months subscription to the Detroit Free Press, for the third best, four months subscription to the NEWS. The essays to be written on one side of the paper only, and signed by the author, giving P. O. address, and mailed to this office during October. We will then submit the original manuscript to competent judges and make the award as they shall decide, we reserving the right to publish any or all the essays sent.

Our Correspondents and friends will oblige us by sending in their

The fire meeting at Chinn's hall Monday evening failed to materialize, presumably on account of Prof.
Cameron's dancing school, to which all the old property owners went, ing out for fire?

While hunting on Fox Lake one self in the lower extremities, making amputation of the foot necessary.

At last accounts he was doing nicely, of recovery seemed doubtful.

It is with pleasure that we learn

The Woodman dance at Rogers' Hall Friday evening drew out a fair sized crowd, and was among the pleasant social events of the season.
The boys realized a small benefit, but not as much as the labor involved would seem to warrant, however they had oceans of fun, which to the average Woodman is equivalent to plenty of money. The supper was spoken of in terms of praise, a merited compliment to the Wood-men's fair wives and daughters who had generously contributed to the same. Music for the occasion was furnished by the Grass Lake Orchestra.

For the best original essay on any

Quite extensive repairs have been made on the M. E. Church. Last tore down the chimney which has leaked and smoked considerable, and Mr. Buckley of Libertyville rebuilt ing touches and as far as we can learn it works well.

How lovely are the evenings now,
The moon shines out so bright, That some of the lovely stars Are lost to view in her light.

And something one might enjoy, Is a ride behind a prancing team,
And thus their time employ.

Fate and Loco Mot.

Of course I loved him. (One, two, three,
And slip the fourth.) Dear fellow! yes, He fairly worshipped me. (Now look!)
This time you take two stitches less.
Quite tall, well-built; his eyes were gray—"You pull that thread the other way."

Two loops. A tangle in his chin.
The sweetest help. (My dear, observe.) He was a poet. (This begins the second row, and makes the curve.) I'm sure you'd like to read the rhymes He wrote me. (Round the edge, three times.)

Poor boy! His fate was very sad!
He died quite young. (Another one, But not so tight.) It broke my heart.
(There, that is very nicely done.) He was my first love, and my last (Be careful, dear! don't go so fast.)

My husband! O, the kindest soul!
I met him (now the pattern shows) In Europe. (We were married there.) And—O, well, yes—as marriage goes, I'm happy. (Keep the thread quite straight.
Or it will tangle.) Such is fate!

—Madeline B. Bridges.

The New Shoes.

You'd know by the way she goes creaking about.

Peering down from all reasonable views At the little feet thrust complacently out.

That Polly had on her new shoes.
They are neat, they are gay, they are button-

And up high.
They are lined in a brilliant blue tint; They are like the stars twinkling up in the sky.

Or a penny just out of the mint.
But it isn't for that she's so happy and proud That she's almost unable to speak; It's because they give out such a charmingly loud—

Such a perfectly beautiful squeak.
—Emma A. Oppen.

MISCHIEVOUS MONKEYS.

Funny Incidents Observed in the Philadelphia Zoological Garden.

The warm and sunny winter days have been most acceptable to the managers of the Zoological Garden, for they have brought in an unusual number of visitors to the big menagerie, says the Philadelphia Record. Since Christmas day, when Bolivar first joined the elephant household, his huge bulk has been the drawing card and an object of wonder to the hundreds of juvenile visitors. There are many people who visit the garden at frequent intervals and study the nature and traits of the animals with such diligence that they become nearly as familiar with the different creatures as are the keepers themselves. One of the most popular of the pets is a baboon, familiarly known as "Rocky," and who is quartered for the winter in a wing of the house devoted to the lions, tigers and other carnivorous animals. "Rocky" has the use of a cage large enough for the biggest lion in the place, and with an abundance of straw to sleep on and play with, he lives like a little lord.

One of the most peculiar traits is his fondness for rats and mice, and the keepers have many tales to tell of his experiences with these small creatures.
His particular delight is to capture a rat that may have strayed unwarily within his reach, and then make a plaything of the captive. Quite recently he thus caught a goodly-sized rat, and had great sport with it until he was so exhausted that he killed it and spoiled his fun. Even then, however, he clung to his strange plaything and refused to give it up to the keepers, continuing his efforts to awaken his pet to playfulness until he had worn all the hair from his body, and only retained with it when the keeper forcibly took it from him.

Another and more recent episode showed that Rocky had inferred from his former experiences that rats were forbidden toys for him. It was late at night, and the keeper, while going his rounds, heard a most prodigious squealing in the vicinity of Rocky's cage. He presumed it to be the voice of a rat, and quietly hastened to see what it meant. As the light of the keeper's lantern flashed into Rocky's cage, amazing scenes were revealed.
Rocky had captured a rat nearly as large as a half-grown cat and was having no end of fun with his prisoner.

The baboon was seated on the floor with his back against the wall of the cage, one of his long bony hands holding the rat firmly around the body, while with the other he vigorously tweaked the tail of the captive. Just as a child would work a jumping-jack, Rocky held the rat close to his face, and further amused himself by grin-ing and grinning in his fiercest and most terrifying manner, a proceeding that evidently much disconcerted the rat. No sooner did Rocky see the keeper than he quickly showed the rat under the straw and let it go, then marching gravely up to the bars of his cage gazed at the keeper with an air of superior innocence.

But Rocky is not the only mischievous and therefore interesting member of the monkey family in the garden. In the large family residing in the morkey-house there are three or four very little fellows that are known for their insatiable thieving propensities. Their particular delight is to snatch a bright feather or bit of gay ribbon from the hat of an unsuspecting lady visitor.
Many ladies who visit the monkeyhouse become so absorbed in watching the pranks of the monkeys that they forget all danger until a little arr and hand are thrust quickly between the bars and the most valuable part of a $20 hat is torn from its owner and carried up among the rafters of the house, where it is deliberately picked to pieces by half a dozen impish little semblances of humanity. Or perhaps it is a man who is "made to believe." He feels his $3.50 soft felt hat gently tugged from his head, and looking up, he beholds a couple of chattering monkeys tugging his headgear through the bars. Before he can seize it it has gone beyond his reach, and the next moment it is somewhere up in the top of the cage, and the apes are busy pulling it apart. Out comes the lining, which one of the monkeys puts gracefully upon his head, and then they all preen gravely in turn to try on what remains of the hat. Once in the clutch of the monkeys, a feather, hat, or any other article may well be counted as lost, for they make the shortest kind of work of anything that comes within their reach. When visitors are plenty the monkeys feel that they are doing very poorly if they do not succeed in pulling four or five feathers in a day, with an occasional soft felt hat by way of diversion.

A few days ago a monkey succumbed to an overdose of peanuts and the whole affair was most pathetic and human-like. Even while suffering the pangs of the peanut disorder the little creature would seize a nut whenever one was thrown in the cage. Mother monkey would scold and warn her child in her guttural notes to touch the forbidden fruit. Then would come an amusing scene of entreaty on the part of the little one and admonition by the mother, ending invariably in a victory for the young one until death followed the overindulgence in peanuts.
The following is a true scene. The barren mother clasped her dead offspring in her arms and hugged it as if trying to bring back the life that had fled, and it was only after long persuasion that the keepers could induce the mother to give up her dead baby.

If any ingenious person who gives his whole time to that sort of thing can manage to resolve the anagram "Table-ray" into its original elements, he should at once send the resolution to Windsor Castle, as it is said Queen Victoria is sitting up at nights worrying over the cabalistic combination.

The power of persistence in matters of love was well illustrated in the courtship of Robert Browning's son.
For fourteen years he maintained a suit at first unsuccessful, but finally rewarded with success. It is hardly to the credit of the poet's penetration that during the time of his son's suspense he had no suspicion of the affair.

Erasmus Sarvino, a miller, of Republic, was caught on a shafting making 200 revolutions per minute and whirled around until every stitch of clothing except his shoes and a cellu-loid collar was torn off his body and then dropped on his head. His body was drawn through a space 11x15 inches, yet he was not injured beyond severe bruises.

According to the census of 1880-81, the last one taken, there were at that time 20,980,626 widows in India, of whom 669,000 were under nineteen years of age and 298,900 under fourteen years. According to the native custom, none of these widows are at liberty to marry again. The same census gave the total female population at 99,700,000, and of these only 200,000 were able to read.

The other day Leroy Chisholm, of New Smyrna, Fla., saw an immense fish that had been stranded in the river by the receding tide. He promptly procured a boat and captured the fish, which measured 12 feet 6 inches in length. Its body was of a golden brown, dotted here and there with spots of yellowish red, which shone beautifully in the sunlight. The fish was evidently a stranger thereabouts, none of the old settlers knowing its name.

The Albany Argus tells a strange story of a Union veteran who fought at Gettysburg. Just before entering the action he took his canteen from his shoulder and hid it in a crevice in the rock. Then came the fiery hail of shot and shell, then, every down regiment like fields of wheat before the reaper. At the close of the battle the soldier forgot all about his canteen, nor did it ever occur to him again until he visited the field at the late reunion. Then it flashed through his mind, and after a few minutes' search he found it where he had left it on the momentous day.

A first-class American watch, well kept, will last thirty or forty years, or sometimes even longer, before the works wear out, but the average life of an ordinary low-priced American watch is ten years. One of a Swiss watch of the same grade seven years.
The length of life for a watch depends largely on the number of its jewels.
The range of prices for American watches runs from $5 to $500, the costliest being a split second minute register timing watch. In the United States about 3,500 watches are manufactured every day. The Waltham factory turns out 1,500 per day, and the Elgin factory between 1,200 and 1,900.

Emperor William's tour in Austria and Italy is said to have cost him not less than $40,000. The amount given to servants of the sovereigns whom he visits is something fabulous, and other presents cost a frightful sum. For example, when Emperor Nicholas visited Windsor in 1843, he gave the housekeeper $1,000. William took him from Berlin eighty diamond rings, 150 silver stars, fifty scarf pins, all richly jeweled; thirty diamond bracelets, six splendid presentation swords, thirty large photographs of himself, with the Empress and their children, all in gold frames; thirty gold watches, with chains (the correct present to a chief), 100 cigar cases, with the Imperial arms and monogram in gold, and twenty stars in diamonds of the Orders of the Black and Red Eagle.

"I thought you would get a sore throat staying out so late Saturday night," admonished Mrs. Brown.
"Come off," growled the old man in a husky voice. "You women can never reason. Haven't you any sense enough to see I got this cold going to church with you Sunday?"—New York Sun.

Yes, my son, Samson's strength seems to have been in his long hair.
If it were, yes, it might be a good thing for you to let your hair grow long. But you must remember, you'll have to have Sampson's head for it to grow on. That's the reason why every corn doctor isn't a Samson.—Nurdtide.

THE ANTIOCH NEWS.

BY J. J. BURKE.

ANTIOCH, ILL.

Work on the railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem has been begun, and it is believed that the line will be in operation by October of next year.

A very sensible suggestion of Mr. Powderly—that election day be made Labor Day, so as to insure every working man the opportunity to vote.

A window glass has been organized, and a man can't look out of his window to see a runaway horse or a street light without paying a tax to a great monopoly.

The time is at hand when the mighty Sophomore will stalk forth at night, to seize the cowering Freshman and convince him that college life has its ups and downs with the aid of a blanket.

PHILADELPHIA genius has perfected a nickel-in-the-slot device which furnishes the victim with a cheap novel. What would be more valuable, however, would be a machine to protect a man from poor fiction.

The difficulties in getting to his mission thrown in the way of Mr. Douglas by the refusal of the commanders of naval vessels to carry him are considerably augmented by the fact that the walking to Hayti is very bad at this season of the year.

The death of a prize fighter soon after leaving "the ring-side," St. Louis, does not seem to deter other prize-fighters from courting a similar fate. It is to be feared that the average slugger, like the average society actress, would welcome death for the excellence of the advertisement.

A St. Paul man named Boorfield has discovered a combination of chemicals which will dissolve the hardest rock. It is understood that the ticket-sellers in the theatre box-offices will spray this liquid on the cheek of the man who asks for free passes when the "Standing Room-Only" sign is out.

This thing of the sauce for the goose being also sauce for the gander entails some very unpleasant arrangements once in awhile. For instance, it is all right and proper that America should forbid Chinese immigration, but it is a high-handed outrage when China mediates retaliation, as she is doing right now.

The laundry business in New York city is in danger of being ruined by Chinese cheap labor. One Yung Wo, a converted washman, has posted on the door of his shop the following inscription: "The peace of the Lord abides in this house. Washing is done here for church members at reduced rates."

The Browning world stands startled and shocked at Professor Swine's lack of faith in its prophet and poet. He says that "Browning lacks the faculty to make the inverted sentences which verse demands to utter their meaning as clearly as the natural sentences of ordinary." The criticism is just. A poet who can not make his verse as clear as another man's prose is a failure. Pope and Byron were poets, not dreamers and mystics.

The entire Wong family in the province of Canton, China, has declared war against the powerful family of Lees. Some years ago the Hakas and Buntos engaged in a similar feudal warfare, thousands of men and women being killed, the war continuing until the Hakas had almost been exterminated. This Wong-Lees feud is the most extensive one on record, and will furnish the subject for spirited discussion in every Chinese laundry in the United States.

Newport, Ky., is in a singular stew over the monetary affairs of its ex-city clerk. He was removed some time since for being short $1,071 in his accounts. The city, however, consented to compromise with him for an even $1,000. Now it is discovered that during the four years in which he held the office he did not draw as much pay as he was entitled to by over $2,000, consequently the book is on the other leg, and the question of the hour at Newport is, shall the city prosecute the ex-clerk as a defaulter, or shall the ex-clerk prosecute the city for not carrying out its contracts?

WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS presents a charming contribution to one of the most important issues of the day, "Annie Kilburn." His genius has taken a new trend in considering the social and industrial problems of progress and poverty; and his strong sympathies and intellectual acumen show astonishing familiarity with the pulse animating the spirit of the time. The highest courts of literary criticism in England have perused this book with interest, and are spontaneous in their commendation of it as the clearest American novel in current literature.

A PHILADELPHIA genius has invented a floor for street cars which will relieve the conductor of the necessity of bawling out every minute or two, "Step up in front." It is arranged on the treadmill principle, and may be moved backward and forward by a simple device easily operated by the driver of the car. Standing upon this floor that obstinate passenger who always refuses to move up is robbed of the power to make him self obnoxious, and from a position near the door, which he seeks to maintain at the inconvenience of other passengers, he is gently but irresistibly propelled to the front.

BOILER EXPLOSION.

The Mississippi River Steamer Corolla Explodes her Boiler.

Forty of the Passengers and Crew Killed Instantly and a Number Injured—The Cause of the Explosion a Mystery.

When the steamer Corolla, of the DuSable Consolidated Line, was approaching the River Settlement, ten miles above Baton Rouge, about noon Thursday, one of her boilers exploded. Inside of three minutes the steamer was sunk, carrying a number of people with her to the bottom of the river, many others, torn and mangled, being carried down the stream to perils. The total loss of life by the disaster is about forty. The Corolla, newly repaired at a cost of about $12,000, was on her first trip of the season. She left New Orleans at 7:30 Wednesday evening with a full cargo, and reached Baton Rouge at about 10:30 Thursday morning, taking on a number of passengers at that place, among them L. T. Mason, secretary of state, and his wife, Mrs. M. K. Mason, and a number of other prominent people.

The explosion was one of the most violent ever known on a steamboat. It knocked down the roof of the cabin and Texas, sent splinters flying in every direction, wounding a number of persons and splitting the vessel so that she sank almost like lead. Although it was in the middle of the day, and every one was on the alert, both passengers and crew found it difficult to escape. It is probable that the explosion immediately killed the fireman, roustabouts and a number of deck hands. Others were seriously hurt by splinters and scalding steam. There was no time to get out the boats and some of the passengers with difficulty secured life preservers. A number of the Corolla had sunk in deep water, and nothing was left of her but portions of the wreck drifting down the river. The passengers were taken to New Orleans. The City of St. Louis was supposed to be descending the river at almost the same time. She came to the relief of those struggling in the water, and took on board those who had already been rescued by the people of the neighborhood, bringing all of them to Baton Rouge. Dysnensia

Two people have suffered more severely from dyspepsia than Mr. H. A. McMahon, a well known doctor of Staunton, Va. He says: "Before 1813 I was in excellent health, weighing over 225 lbs. and was able to digest and assimilate 10 to 125 pounds of food and suffered burning sensations in my stomach, palpitation of the heart, nausea, indigestion, loss of sleep and melancholia. For years I have suffered from these dyspeptic symptoms, and have tried many remedies. One day a workman suggested that I take Hood's Sarsaparil as it had cured his wife of dyspepsia. I did so and before taking the medicine the heartburn and palpitation had ceased, my stomach became easier, nausea disappeared, my strength returned, slowly at first, and then rapidly. After taking the medicine for a few days I felt better and my body. Before the first bottle had been taken I had regained my former weight and natural condition. I am to-day a well man and I ascribe to the use of Hood's Sarsaparil."

Western Correspondence.

SPokane Falls, W. T.

Dear Editor:
As the people in your vicinity would like to hear something about the far West, I will try to give them a fair description of the same. I cannot give a full description of the country all the way out here as one has to ride night as well as day. In passing through northern Wisconsin on the cars, one can see nothing but swamps and saw mills until you get near the western line where you strike a beautiful farming country. Then comes St. Paul, Minn. which is not situated on a vast prairie as I always had an idea it was, but is surrounded with scrub oaks, but is a fine city. Next comes Minneapolis, nine miles from St. Paul; the prairie commences between the two cities. Riding on this prairie for a distance of nearly fourteen hundred miles there was not a tree or bush to be seen excepting where it had been set out or otherwise along a stream of water.

The bad lands are indescribable to any one first riding through them on the train, it is merely a mass of rocks like those of the Rockies only of a smaller size. All of your readers have read more about the Rocky Mountains than I have seen yet. The next place of any interest is the bad lands of which no one seemed to know the name, a distance of 1537 miles west of St. Paul. Spokane has a population of about 18,000; six years ago it was only a flag station; it is no place for an Eastern man except he is very rich. I dare not tell you all about Spokane, for you would all say that Butte was the biggest liar that traveled. I thought when I got there that I would buy a lot a little out of town and put me up in a house but I got left. I took a circle around the town about two miles from the center and found the minked lots selling for $15,000 each; the size of the lots are 50 ft. front and 100 deep. An improved lot is selling at from $20,000 to $250,000, and not much improved either. There are more people here now I think than there will be five years hence. I will bid you adieu for this time as I am going to start for the coast to day at 11 o'clock A. M. I am happy to think that I can leave Spokane in as good a condition as I am. I feel like the man in Custer M. T. that runs an express wagon drawn by a span of mules, one of them balked and the man kicked him but got kicked in return, he tried to lead the mule but got struck from in front, he then sat down to congratulate himself to think that he had a mule that worked both ways.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

FISK:—Hallo Gilmore, you seem to enjoy life hugely since you left your place; I see you ride out a great deal, and take great comfort, but why don't you take Mrs. Gilmore out too?

GILMORE:—Oh she's lame poor thing and can't go very well.

FISK:—Well I suppose she cooks your meals and washes your clothes, bakes bread and sees to things generally, don't she?

GILMORE:—Oh that she does of course.

FISK:—Well I should think if she can do that she could take comfort out riding as well as you, if she were let do so. Thus the conference ended.

MISS EWALD'S PROTEGE.
"He is handsome, he speaks correctly, and there is a kind of superb independence about him that I admire. What a pity he is only a farmer!" Miss Ewald mused, looking over the fence at the reapers in the wheat field, and singling out Brian Jeffrey's tall, well-knit figure, in its cool blue cotton overall and blouse.

How easily and lightly he swung the scything cradle around, the yellow grain falling before the glittering blade.

Miss Ewald had been at Grasslands a week. She was 26 and thoroughly disgusted with the world, or so she imagined when she selected to spend the summer in the country, instead of going with her friends on the usual round of gaiety at the watering places.

"I am tired of folly and fashion, of society—of everything," she had said, and packing her trunks went away to the loneliness, the cool, deep shades, and the simple, primitive life of Grasslands, bewildering Farmer Jason and his comely wife with her beauty and grace and city toilets, and making acquaintance with Brian Jeffrey, the farmer's nephew.

"He is probably as old as I am, but with as little worldly knowledge as I had at 16," shifting her white linen parasol a little, her eyes still fixed on the blue-clad figure in the field.

A brilliant idea had shaped itself in her mind during the work. She would help the young man to a higher plane of life—point the way into the intellectual world.

"Why, not?" she had reasoned. "Of course my friends," with a slight curl of her lip, "would deride the plan, but I see no harm in it. He is here shut off from the world, and with no examples to stimulate ambition or make him desire culture."

The morning that she stood by the fence, looking into the wheat field, she decided to speak to him about it—of her, with tact and delicacy, to loan him books and papers, and her aid in turning his thoughts into higher channels.

That evening, as she stood on the veranda, gathering a bunch of creamy roses for the bosom of her light gown, he came and leaned against the column near her.

The fading daylight seemed to gather about her golden head and lovely, purely-colored face, and the young farmer's dark gray eyes were fixed steadily on her. It was a good thing and place to unfold her purpose.

His face flushed, and he looked down at his shapely, sunburnt hands, while she gently explained that all her books and magazines were at his service, and that she would be pleased to have him read with her, and to loan him books and papers, and her aid in turning his thoughts into higher channels.

"Would you indeed be so kind to an ignorant, poor wretch?" he murmured. Her face flushed.

"It is no great act of kindness, Mr. Jeffrey. I understand the limitations of your surroundings, and if you will accept—"

"I do, most gladly, gratefully!" he quickly interrupted. "In a country neighborhood, where all, or nearly all, are on the same level—where an almanac and a Bible constitute a library—there is not much hope for literary advancement."

It was a strange summer to Rosemond Ewald—she uttered out of the line of conventional experiences.

Never had teacher so apt a pupil, and the lines of study took a much wider range than she had ever imagined.

Favorite authors were invested with new interest, and she found all her own mental faculties stimulated and quickened. She forgot that she had ever been weary of life.

It was delightful to have such an intelligent, sympathetic protegee. "I never knew that such a simple act of kindness could give one so much pleasure. I feel like a different creature from the languid, enervated, woman who came up here."

One evening she was surprised and delighted at the sound of a fine tenor voice singing "My Queen" with an eloquence of expression unexpected.

She stepped to the parlor door and saw Brian Jeffrey sitting before the small, almost timeless old piano, playing and singing.

He stopped instantly at sight of her. "I did not know you could sing, Mr. Jeffrey," advancing into the dimly-lighted room.

"Only a little, Miss Ewald," he said, hastily, looking as guilty as if he had been detected in a crime.

"You sing extremely well, and with wonderful expression."

Her frank, warm praise overmastered the self-control he had been putting upon himself for days.

"I looked at her, a passionate fire leaping to his eyes. "I ought to sing that song well, with you always in my thoughts," he said, in a low, quick tone.

toward the gin. Killed! Brian Jeffrey, in all his strength and youth, killed!

The hot sun beat upon her fair head, dazzled her eyes; she grew faint. "Miss Ewald!"

She stopped, looked up with a low cry, then held out her hands.

He stood before her, untouched, unharmed.

"Oh, Brian, Brian, they told me you had been killed! Forgive my wicked pride, my cruel words, for I love you!"

The truth was out at last—the truth she had been learning over since their estrangement.

He caught her hands and kissed them passionately.

"Forgive you? What would I not forgive you for those words, my dear? As no lives were lost I thank heaven for the accident that has caused this betrayal of your heart."

Miss Ewald was at a reception, gowned in creamy silk and with diamonds at her throat. It was the first reception of the season, and her friends gathered around her, declaring that she seemed a mysterious, changed being, but the vivacious, laughing hostess bared her off to a pretty music room.

"I want to introduce you to a friend of mine, a fine musician, wealthy, cultured, who has traveled and studied abroad as well as in America. If you were not busy-hearted, Rosemond, I should hope to make a match between you."

Miss Ewald laughed softly as she thought of Brian Jeffrey, and turned the simple heart ring he had placed upon her finger.

What would her fashionable friends say if they knew that she had promised to marry a farmer and loved him? The music room was deserted save for a solitary figure standing before the grand piano. Not until the gentlemen turned, and her hostess said: "Mr. Jeffrey!" did she realize that it was Brian himself who stood before her in faultless evening dress, his face and hands still showing the sunburn of his labor at Grasslands.
